12. Essey:

I got interested to answer when I have seen the third question. On the basis of that question, I am going to share my story- Life is full of challenges and I always like to accept that as well as I motivate others to take challenges which will make ourselves to be more expressive with our capability. Most of the people actually don't have better idea about themselves that's why we always get afraid to take new steps. From my point of view, this is a very ordinary case for anyone chosen from the basket- it happens due to our social, economic and educational structure. And that is binding us of doing the innovation. Form the very childhood, I tried to avoid monotonic life. At the beginning of my academic career, I used to be a very bright student, may be for the pressure of surroundings and guidance of my mother. At that time academic makers were very important for me rather than learning. But after passing from school (SSC), I was a free bird and started taking challenges according to my wish. And started experimenting with self-career. After a certain period, I got myself involved in different activities which were not result oriented and I found myself wasting my potentiality. And I have started to change my strategy but it was too late to get back- where I have found myself helpless like 'Abhimanyu' in 'Mahabharat' who knows the way to break 'Chakravyuh' but don't the way to get back. At that time somehow, I have saved my back and sustained in the market of career. Still now, whenever I look on my academic records these stories remind the reality and motivate me to run. During my graduation I was focused in learning and after completing the graduation I have started with the greatest challenges of professional career. I have started my career with research and development (R&D) which was my dream always. And after working a long time with traditional designs and structures, I was getting bore and decided to work in the field for the root level which was really an interesting experience of my life and I have really enjoyed. But something was still missing in my life and I had started to think what to add more which will make my journey more exciting. On that moment of, I got the largest challenge of my life from one of my colleagues in an office meeting when I was giving my speech on "Result oriented business and jobs". He told that- "A technical person can't add value in sales and will not understand the marketing plan". That made me to think and I have started working as a sales person. At the staring I was little difficult for me but I have applied different strategy of market research and found myself successful within a very sort time. I don't believe in taking right decisions, I always take decisions and make them right.
