My uncle always used to say, "only challenges make a man a real man." Hailing from the South East region of Afghanistan, my early childhood was crippled with countless conflicts. Financial hiccups heavily hovered upon my family. Educational opportunities stooped as an intermittent challenge. Amidst these trials, to have a successful academic career was not an easy choice. Gratitude overwhelms my elder brother who reinforced my aspirations with pomp and gaiety. In fact, in Afghanistan, if you have an elder brother you are somehow lucky. By default, all responsibilities would be shouldered upon the elder brother. Sad to note, to me, such a luxury of security did not last long. I was uprooted from my comfort zones when I received admission to Bamyan University.

Heading towards an unknown land for my higher studies was a challenging streak. Let me recount how I was blown off with setbacks and their impressions in my life and the lessons that taught me for greater maturity. I made my mind to face this challenge by leaving my close relatives and all my friends in my hometown. In the beginning, it was very difficult for me to adjust to a new environment. It took me to the worst situations that I had to conquer; for instance, I had to live in solitude for a while. Besides, I had to take care of myself and do all of my stuff such as cooking and washing clothes. As time elapsed, things got easier, and I got the skills of tackling the hardships. Now when I raise the curtain of my memories, those challenges taught me lucrative and fruitful lessons that contributed to my successes and growth. Another issue that offered me a tough fight in Bamyan was financial matters. Although I had the financial support of my family, it was not enough to compensate for all my expenses. Since my thirst for knowledge was bottomless, this gave me the impetus to bear my best despite this barrier. My continual struggles and relentless efforts helped me to capacitate my skills. Learning English, for example, was one thing that I tried for. Through this, I got a job in a prestigious international NGO. This experience was worth painstaking. I feel stronger to chase my dreams when I scored 88 in the TOEFL. This is so true that life itself teaches us constructive lessons. Being a young man of 24, currently rendering my resourcefulness among advanced level English language sessions at JRS (Jesuit Refugee Service), my search for freedom, truth, and knowledge has multifaceted layers. Now, my parents and relatives take pride that I am the first bachelor's degree holder in my village. At the moment, I chase my dreams with an insatiable passion and synergy, where the fire within me kindles other fires. In sum, whoever I am is because of the great challenges that I had on my way towards my academic pursuits. I strongly believe, the lessons we take from obstacles can be fundamental to later success.
