Essay no 4 Corruption a modern phenomenon I concur with the above statement that corruption is seriously the biggest issue that every sector of the nation is facing. Corruption is more than just breaking the rules; it's widespread like an incurable disease. In a short span of time. Corruption refers to a kind of criminal activity or dishonesty. Most noteworthy, this act compromises the rights and privileges of others. It occurs in many contexts from bribery in a sports organization to a secretary stealing from the office pool. Most likely, individuals in positions of authority are a unit vulnerable to corruption. Altogether, it actually reflects greedy and narcissistic behavior of an individual or an organization. It is like an evil taking out the best of things from our reach. Almost each citizen pays tax? But are we provided enough services to the amount we pay to the corrupted governance not very surprised but the answer to every question is 'No'. You drive on the roads? - how do you feel about the fact that your family could be dead due to the fact that a driver bribed for his driving license and thus cannot drive but does and then causes an accident. How do you feel when I tell you that you could have had clean water delivered to your door but the contractor that was supposed to do this paid your councilor to get the contract but both agreed that the work would actually not be done or would not be done correctly. See that Bridge: it's going to collapse in the first big rain due to the fact that the contractor used the wrong cement because it was cheaper - or because his buyer was bribed to place the order with a disreputable supplier. Corruption is the most effective way to kill the growth of a national economy, an individual's life, a poor guy's income i.e. economic inequality often making rich even richer and poor even poorer. We people say "there is no way, nor will there be a way, to eliminate corruption completely", "Like the poor and criminals it will be with us always". Setting this as our goal condemns us to failure and despondency. The result is that nothing gets done at all. Corruption starts from within, the common people. If we can stop bribing the officials or stop taking bribes to perform a work, we can have a different scenario present over this country with everyone standing against corruption. Corruption stops when those who run the government demands and approaches for it. I personally if had the power an opportunity to bring changes would implement some of the basic electronic media which would for sure minimize the practice of corruption and also would introduce budgeting, really good way to keep the people informed about what's going on in their governments is to have the public allocate government funds in open hearings. An active investigation capability by the media also helps to remove the barrier along with independent judicial, investigative and prosecution from the executive branch for each sectors to understand and bring positive impacts in development and reduce corruption but the major sector to focus will be to create Strong anti-bribery laws for them to enforce and Active prosecution of those participating in corruption.
