As human beings, everyday is a challenge to overcome and each day that we have lived is a stepping stone for the person we are today. I believe we all have to overcome our fears to be the best version of ourselves. On that journey, some experiences leave so much of a mark that it shapes the very path of life that we take later on as individuals. Me as a teenager was a very introverted kid. The kind who stays home on holidays. The kind that gets bullied for not speaking out loud. I used to be the kid with the self confidence of a hummingbird. Am not gonna lie, my family, friends and teachers tried their best to take me out of my shell but all their efforts used to be in vain only. This used to be me till 12th standard. By the time I started my bachelor's degree I had accepted that I was going to be like this forever. But my first year of undergraduate had a profound effect on my way of thinking. I was failing miserably to understand my subjects and was on the verge of losing any hope to pass the semester even. Moreover, a new country and unknown cultures most certainly wasn't helping my case. But then seeing my situation one of my hostel mates suggested me to study with them in a group. Initially I was very sceptical of the idea because I wasn't a team player myself and all my life I have overcome every obstacle on my own. But I gave it a try and I don't know what happened eventually it seemed way easier to work with friends and grasping critical theories. It seemed like I was able to connect with someone for the first time ever. They were very open to help me along with their studies. With this initial kick of good experience I thought of pushing my limits and going outside my comfort zone to make new friends and work with them. Finally I got the courage to come out of my shell and work with people. Once I shed my shell people also were very friendly to me. I started expressing more with my professors which in turn helped me with my studies. I used to even work with the university fest committee to organize the annual cultural fest. I am no longer the underconfident boy in my class. I know how to ask for help and even I try to help the people who are going through the same problems that I was going through. As someone helped me to do better, I also want to help someone excel in their lives. I will hold on to these experiences and friends very dear and close to my heart for the rest of my life and that is how I was able to conquer the biggest obstacle of my life which was a battle with my inner self.
