We don't grow when things are easy, we grow when we face challenges. Challenges increase interest in learning. I recently completed my BSCSE from United International University, Bangladesh. We have to do a final year project or thesis for completing our graduation degree. Consequently, I and some of my friends make a group for doing the final year project. We decided to do a project based on Network. We create a contemporary cellular network. Using that network we can communicate with others through messaging and voice calls. We completed our graduation by submitting that project. After completing my graduation I joined SIDA TECH as an intern. I started working on a project called BangladeshWordNet. It was a project that focuses on machine learning. The whole works were data-related. I know python. But when I started the project with my team, I face some challenges. All of my team member's major was on Machine Learning. On the contrary, my major was on Network. After facing challenges, I started learning more. It increases my interest in that field. Nowadays, data becomes the most valuable thing. We can make life easy if we can correctly use those data. New machines can recognize the sentiment of a person by reading their post. These things increase my interest in data science. Now, I want to do my MSc in data science.
