12. Essey:

In school, I was always seen as a loser. Not because I failed in the exams, but because I failed to live up to the expected standards. I used to work hard and read a lot. This raised my reputation to such that the teachers hoped I would top the class. Unfortunately the highest I could go was become the fifth best student. That only happened once. Though I saw it as a failure due to the tussles I had with the boy who topped the class, in the other exams I was forced to reconsider my view because my grades became so worse that I once ended up in the bottom seven. It was because of this inconsistency, coupled with my loss of taste in reading, that the teachers began to see me as a failure. The boy I competed with went on a long streak of topping the class. To add insult to injury, he became a bully and told others how much a fool I was. This, in retrospect, inspired me to change. I decided that the only way I could beat him was to topple him, nothing less. I got the energy and the motivation to rub off the dust of defeat and, once for all, go for the jugular. I must admit it was a relatively long journey. It took me two years to arrive at the place where I could top the class. Fortunately it was the last year of school. My rival sensed the pressure and, luckily for me, it appeared that getting a real competitor finally broke him. I went after him in all the exams but fell short and became the second best student. It was in the final exam, however, that I managed to hit the jackpot. I finally became the top student. It shocked me that I actually managed to achieve the sought-after position. To be crowned the best student in the graduation exam was every student's dream. The teachers were so shocked that they told me I did the unthinkable. My rival's bullying turned into utter silence. This moment in my life in primary school changed me. It taught me that no matter how low I fell I could still reach for the top. The experience made a better competitor. Because of the lessons I learned, I became a better student and strived for the top in both secondary school and college. In overcoming my fears and achieving my highest possible ambition, my eyes were opened to a new side of me. A side that would never give. A side that wouldn't tolerate failure.
