Topic 2" Life is incomplete without challenges or failure, and these obstacles make us strong, stronger, or even strongest. In my third semester at The Aligarh Muslim University, I was so depressed with my studies. Depressions had many reasons, but most importantly I was not doing well in academics, my dream of engineering seemed a nightmare. I couldn't sleep for nights worrying about my studies, career, family et cetera. Suddenly I got off my bed one sleepless night, sat at my desk, and decided to quit AMU and to study any easy subject at any other university in India, but let me try for the last time before that! The next morning, I called one of my seniors in the college and asked for a couple of hours to talk about topics and get some tips and tricks on how to get a passing mark, just passing. She showed me whatever I asked for. From that day I kept on studying instead of worrying because I worried my most, I had nothing more to worry about. The third semester was the last phase of my depression. My results continued to rise and my fear decreased. My first two semesters had an SPI of around 5.5, in my third almost reached 6 and in the end, in my eighth semester, I hit an SPI of 9.484. Also, I published a conference paper, and that also got the best paper award. This may express my story of fulfilling my dream of being an engineer. But in reality, this was my story of achieving a superpower of never being depressed. Even though it sounds funny, but technically I'm depression-proof. I'm full with so much positivity that whatever the situation is, or whatever the task I get, I simply smile at that, and start executing that! In this time of the pandemic, this amazing quality helped me a lot. From a frightened engineering student to a fearless graduate, I'm able to take quick decisions which helps me in every phase of my life. I started up a tea production business back in August 2020 and my "depression proof" characteristic helped me facing many obstacles and taking rapid action for my firm. Being in an ultimate depressed situation in life, and afterward recovering from that taught me very well that nothing is impossible. Smart hard work, counseling can make any situation smoother. It also opened my eyes towards more positivity, and positivity is the only solution to anything. Now I know a fact that, in the end, everything will be just fine. Also, it's not always the destination that we conquer, but the path we go through, is what we achieve in real. This story is the most important part of my life, and I believe this express a lot about me.
